5. Pinnicon Ridge Dam Modification Project Impacts – Chuck Ungs

Ungs discussed the different Iowa projects, and his background as fisheries biologist, fisherman, and his current role for Linn County Conservation Department. He told the committee that fishing has improved in Iowa where these types of projects have happened. This is due to better habitat for fish such as smallmouth bass and walleye. Ungs said that better habitat means better fishing.

He lives in Manchester where a whitewater park was built. He has seen first-hand an economic boon and talked about small businesses benefiting. He estimated 350 people would use the park on a Saturday. The number of fisherman using the area has also increased.

He said that the hydraulic modeling that was done for the project is consistent with today's water levels. He explained how run of river works and why the upstream areas were unaffected. The water quality at the whitewater park and upper reaches of the Maquoketa River have improved.

Manchester received funding from the Iowa DNR to build their park. He was asked about the safety of the whitewater park and he said that is safer than the dam that it replaced. People will get the occasional bumps and bruises, but no major safety issues. He created a safety class to teach users of the park how to safely use it.

Ungs was asked about changes he would like to see in Manchester. He replied with having more fishing access, changing rooms and/or outdoor showers.

6. Grants Budget

Glynn shared the budgets for the project. There are two funding options; state grants and the BUILD grant budget. The City should find out the results of the BUILD grant in September.
